

Gatepost Partners is building a regional commercial kitchen hood and exhaust cleaning, grease trap, and compliance company, starting in the Carolinas and expanding into Georgia and Tennessee, led by a founding company doing $500k to $3mm of EBITDA. Owners take cash at closing, roll equity into the combined company, and keep their name on the truck and their crew on the routes.

MANAGEMENT

A True Partnership

Encouraged to stay and grow

WHY THIS INDUSTRY

The code writes the order book

NFPA 96 sets cleaning frequency by what is cooking: monthly for solid fuel, quarterly for high volume, semiannually for casual dining.

Revenue repeats without a salesperson

Two to twelve visits per kitchen per year, on a schedule the fire marshal and the insurer both care about.

Genuinely unconsolidated

97 independent operators identified across our states, almost all single-truck or few-truck. No corporate roll-up operates in Atlanta or the Carolinas.

A real margin gap to close

Franchise units run about 15% EBITDA; route-dense operators reach 35% to 40%. Closing that gap is the whole thesis.

HOW THE PARTNERSHIP WORKS

01 The founding company

Its leaders stay on as partners. The crew and name stay.

02 Neighbors join

Adjacent operators add kitchens on the same nights.

03 Grow together

Shared scheduling, documentation, and buying power.

ABOUT OUR FOUNDER

Chris Kern founded Gatepost Partners to build a commercial kitchen safety company alongside the owners who join it. He runs a residential water treatment business, which taught him what a small service company depends on: a technician who shows up, a phone someone answers, and route density. Before that he spent several years at a lower middle market private equity firm on founder-owned platform buyouts and add-ons. He is an MBA candidate at The Wharton School and plans to run the platform day to day.
